

There for you every
step of the way...

Adoption is a beautiful picture of bringing a child into a home and giving a child a family. Sometimes, though, the child comes into the home with overwhelming needs. And sometimes, the family is not the right fit for the child as some children struggle to adapt to family life.

Many families are unaware of the child's unique needs prior to adoption. These families love the children enough to wonder about a new beginning for the child from the end of an adoptive placement. During these times, Adoption Choices of Oklahoma is available to help families determine what is best for the adopted child. Second placement adoption is not the only solution and should never be considered

Second Placement Adoptions

Helping families and finding a home for every child.

A New Beginning

Hope, Help, and Healing

Sometimes, being a good parent means letting go... Children who are adopted often have a history of trauma, and when raised by parents whose qualities are unable to care for the child, a living situation may become unsafe.

No one wants a child to be without a family. Dissolving or disrupting an adoption, with a new family ready to step into the role as parent.

Saying goodbye is never easy, but second placement adoption can help ensure the safety and well-being of all.

What does it mean to dissolve or disrupt an adoption?

Dissolution

When a judge overturns an adoption after legal finalization.

Disruption

When an adoption ends before it has been legally finalized in court.

Those considering a dissolution or disruption are advised to involve an adoption agency and an attorney specializing in second placement adoptions.
